Course Description

English 1302 provides students with advanced training in communication skills emphasizing the writing and reading of argumentative prose and adapting writing to alternate audiences. Students will write weekly, including such texts as informal reflective pieces, summaries of and responses to argumentative texts, argumentative papers, and longer papers integrating separate research activities.

Course Theme: Rereading and Reconstructing the World

Rereading the World

In his “Allegory of the Cave,” Plato argues for the pursuit of knowledge. Plato’s quest for knowledge involves looking beyond the “shadows” of reality, that is, the world as it presents itself to us. In this course you will be asked to examine the shadows cast by an issue of importance to you. These “shadows” are the material evidence left in the wake of an issue or event, such as literature, music, historical documents, and secondary scholarship. As you select and read sources that provide such evidence, you will look for ways to enlighten—or cast light upon—the issue at hand. What larger conclusion or truth can you draw from examining these shadows?
Reconstructing the World
Plato’s philosophies serve as the foundation from which much of Western thought has developed. However, subsequent philosophers have argued that there is not one universal truth to be sought after, as Plato implies. These thinkers argue that reality is subjective—that is, it is what individuals make of it. From this point of view, you could think of the research project you will conduct this semester as an opportunity for you to construct new meaning from your research and thinking about an issue.

Putting it Together
Perhaps you should think of the research process of a combination of the related activities of rereading and reconstructing the pieces of our world into meaningful arguments. As you sort out competing perspectives and sources of information, remember that you are in a sense united with all of the other voices who have weighed in on your issue by a spirit of civil academic debate about ideas that matter.

Course Objectives
- Practice locating and verifying the credibility and usefulness of primary and secondary sources
- Develop rhetorical reading skills and the ability to weigh various perspectives on an issue
- Formulate an original argument incorporating primary and secondary source material
- Practice writing argumentatively and rhetorically for academic audiences

Assignments

Read all assigned readings and come to class prepared to actively participate in class discussions or write reader responses.

Quizzes/In Class Writings (10%)

Discussion Journals and Responses (20%)
Due: every Monday and Friday.

Most weeks, you will participate in a class discussion about the content we are covering. By responding to the discussion topics and engaging your classmates’ responses, you will work together to make sense of and form opinions about readings and begin to build your own arguments for your research paper.
Some weeks, your Journals will serve as a peer review session for sections of your research paper or a venue for other “in-class” activities.

I will review and comment on your Journal/Responses throughout the week. Please be sure to read all of your classmates Journals as they are given to you randomly.

Requirements:
- One main Journal is due each week on Monday (300 words (about a page) but longer if necessary)
- At least one quality response to your classmates’ Journal each week. This may include comments, rebuttals, or questions. I encourage a response discussion in which you give your ideas, opinions and reasons for either agreeing or disagreeing with your classmate on the topic, or providing additional insight or evidence to refute the material presented. (Responses should be ½ page or more.)
- Entries should be proofread for grammar and usage. Your language does not need to be as formal as language you would use in a formal essay, but respect your classmates by making clear and coherent counterarguments.
- It is okay to disagree—in fact I encourage friendly academic arguments—but you may not use abusive language or attack anyone. Let’s keep our discussions civil and respectful.

Writing Assignments (WAs) (75% total)
The writing assignments (WAs) are designed to scaffold your semester-long process of composing an eight to ten page research paper about an issue of your choice. These WAs include an issue exploration essay (10%), a research proposal (15%), an annotated bibliography of sources (15%), a draft of the research paper (10%) and the research paper itself (25%). Because the first three WAs represent steps toward composing your final paper, it is probable that the final paper will include ideas or even wording from previous WAs. For example, a summary of a source’s argument that you wrote for the annotated bibliography might be incorporated into a body paragraph of your final essay. That is acceptable. As long as you are thoughtfully shaping and revising your project over time, I fully expect the WAs to support and contribute to the final project.

The individual prompts for the WAs will be from the text and instructor assigned material (see the calendar below for deadlines).
Late Work Policy
Any assignments submitted late will be docked a letter grade. I will not accept late WAs (1-3) a week after the assigned due date. Since the WAs build on each other, it is especially important for you to turn your work in on time.

Statement on Behalf of Students with Disabilities
The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) is a federal anti-discrimination statute that provides comprehensive civil rights protection for persons with disabilities. Among other things, this legislation requires that all students with disabilities be guaranteed a learning environment that provides for reasonable accommodation of their disabilities.
