A THICK BLACK MARKER,
A TEAR OUT OF AN AD OR DESIGN THAT CAUGHT YOUR EYE

Course Description:

This class is about conceptual thinking as it applies to advertising. The crafts of Art Direction and Copywriting, which are applied to a concept to create an Ad.

We will attempt to cover the following:
Understanding of what makes good, creative advertising. Understanding of what makes bad, uninspired advertising.

Develop creative, smart and applicable concepts to solve advertising problems. Also, applying your design and typography skills, as well as knowledge of photography and illustration, to create clear, communicative layouts for your concepts.
Finally, to develop writing skills to craft interesting and captivating headlines, as well as clear, concise body copy to communicate the desired message for each of your ads.

This is a combination lecture and critique class. You will do much of your work outside of class. During class, you will evaluate your classmates’ work, and they will evaluate yours. This class relies on your fair and honest input. Your participation is a requirement of the class.

We will critique you as well. We will judge your work against the best student work in the country. We will be very hard on your work.

Assignments:

The class will revolve around three major assignments that will be given throughout the semester. There will be other minor assignments like reading assignments, quizzes, in class concepting, writing assignments, etc. which may generate the fourth piece.

Final Critique:

At the end of the semester, you will bring all of the ads you’ve completed throughout the semester to the Final Critique. Much like the final Exams of your other classes, the Final Critique is the most important class of the semester.

Usually, we try to get prominent creative directors from the Dallas area come in and critique your work. They will be brutally honest. They will be harsh. They will judge your work against the best student portfolios in the country. The grade you receive for your final critique will be worth 40 percent of your final grade.

IMPORTANT:

If you fail your final critique you will fail the class. As 40% of your final grade, it doesn’t take a rocket scientist to see how important that is.

ALSO, if you are late to final critique, you will not be allowed into the final critique. If you are not allowed in, you will not pass the final critique. As a result, you will not pass the class. We cannot stress this point enough. Printing problems are no excuse for being late. By now you should understand that printing problems can and do occur at the worst times. You must prepare for this by printing out your work in advance.
Traffic is no excuse for being late. Please understand that there will be accidents and construction on the highways. And there will be a lot more of it on Final Critique night. Plan on being at the Final Critique early. Maybe an hour early.

WORK ON THE MAJOR ASSIGNMENT.

Do not come into class without work. If you are having trouble, give us a call. Coming to class without work is a waste of the class’s time.

How the major assignments work:

On week one, you will be given the name of your client. The ultimate goal is to finish with a campaign for each client. The following week you will be asked to bring in 10 unique campaign ideas for your client, as well as a finished creative brief for that assignment. You will need to support each of your 10 ideas with ideas for creative executions. These can be sketched in marker, illustrated, or written out.

Class critique will evaluate the merits of your work.

The next week, you will return with rough computer layouts of any work from the first week that was deemed to have potential. At this point, an early draft of the body copy (if any is necessary) is due. You are required to show two different layout directions. This means two separate visual looks for your campaign. The work should show progress in the use of typefaces. The layouts should show placement options for images, headlines, body copy, borders, etc. If the headlines from week one needed work, you will have options for these as well.

The following week, the campaign should be finished for presentation. You will then receive the next assignment.

How the minor assignments work:

Sometimes we will have in-class assignments and other miscellaneous homework assignments. If we give a reading or research assignment, there will likely be a quiz. There may or may not be a few pop quizzes as well. There will also be final test at the end of the semester. This is not your final exam, the critique is your final exam.

Program participation requirements and progress assessment:

Everyone who is participating in the program here at school is required to enter work into specific shows. This can be work from any of your classes, but it is a requirement of progressing through the program.

Also, there will be a progress assessment at the end of this semester. It is YOUR responsibility to contact the Art Office for a list of the requirements for this.
If you fail to pass the assessment, you will not be allowed to progress in the program. Unfortunately, we will not kick anybody out of the program yet, as other schools do, but you will likely be required to retake classes where you need work, before you can take more advanced classes. Making a C in the class does not mean you will automatically progress, in fact it’s probably an indicator that you still need work.

Grades:

If you will be unable to attend class on a day when a major assignment is due, you can bring your work to us during the week BEFORE class.

Anyone who fails to turn in their major assignment on the due date will receive an F. See the next subhead for information on how you can improve your major assignment grades.

Your major assignment grades will be worth 40% of your final grade. The remaining 20% will come from tests, quizzes, random assignments and your participation in class. The final critique is worth 40%.

How to improve your grade on a major assignment.

So, you're not happy with a grade you received on a major assignment? Well, fear not. Continue working on that assignment (it’s part of the final critique anyway) and turn in your improvements. If you have addressed problems and concerns that were mentioned during the critique of the assignment, we will improve your grade. The amount of improvement is at my discretion. You can resubmit work as many times as you would like, up until class time during dead week. You can also improve your grade if you are turning in a late major assignment. If it is turned in during the week following the due date, you will be docked one letter grade. I will not grade major assignment work that is two weeks late, the F will stand. However, it is still in your best interests to continue working on your major assignments as they will be part of the final critique.

What your grades mean:

A Perfect, ready for your book
B Idea is in place & art direction is heading in the right direction, needs major finessing
C Average. Idea is weak, needs a serious boost OR totally inappropriate art direction
D Failing, below average. lack of participation and/or poor attendance
F Fail. Inferior work, work not turned in, failure to attend class
