Course Objectives:

1. The student will explore the technical aspects of painting, including structures, materials and their application, color theory, and composition, with the aim of developing an understanding as to how formal and material issues contribute to the content of paintings.
2. The student will begin the process of developing a personal aesthetic. Students will study traditional and contemporary approaches to painting and apply critical analyses in order to broaden perceptual awareness.
3. These objectives require professional discipline in all areas of studio practice.

Evaluation and Grades:

1. Degree of involvement and contribution to the class – both in critiques and daily.
2. Dedication to self-directed work. You will need to work outside of class.
3. Degree of improvement, growth of understanding of the nature of painting.
4. Attendance is mandatory. Do Not Miss Class. Come to class on time and prepared. We only meet 30 times between the first day of the term and finals. That is not a lot of time. After three absences, the student’s grade will be reduced one letter grade for each subsequent absence.

Course Projects:

1. Each student will produce a suite of at least six paintings that form a coherent body of work. Each painting will be a stand-alone work of art, and all the paintings will reflect the sustained vision of an individual. Think of a book of poems, each complete in itself, but all related to one another.
2. Each student will produce an artist’s statement of about 250 words to accompany the work.
3. Each student will provide written responses to the works of the other students in the class at midterm and at the end of the semester. (Hint: Take notes during critiques.)
